Your request for a review of what you call a "correction of errors" by our Military Personnel Division has been carefully considered.

First of all, let me assure you that we are most interested in the welfare of military personnel who served with this Agency, and I especially appreciate your apprehension about anything that appears to jeopardize your flying status.

Your removal from flying status was accomplished by an Air Force Flight Surgeon, and this same authority is responsible for your restoration to flying duty. This Agency has no authority to change your flying status and, if I understand your letter of 15 November clearly, the question of your flying status is being handled in proper Air Force channels.

We have been in touch with Air Force personnel in Washington who assure us that our understanding that this Agency has no proper role is correct.

Although we cannot respond to your specific request in this instance, such information as we have which may have a bearing on your career as a whole will be made available to appropriate Air Force authorities. I understand that [redacted] has already made his professional medical opinion available to the Air Force pursuant to your direct request. STAT

Sincerely, STAT
